This is getting-ready time for my farmer nieces and nephews. Today's plowing and investment in money and labor may or may not pay off in rich crops. There's a big IF in every farm family's life. If the sun shines, if it doesn't rain too much, if we have a drought—if, if, if. However, there's one crop which has no "if" side. It's a crop of Savings Bonds, which grows steadily, rain or shine, wind or calm, year after year until it produces $4 for every $3. My city nieces and nephews can plant this crop, too, by joining and staying on the payroll savings plan or by arrangement with their bank. U. S. Treasury Department

Anywhere You Look There's Oil

But Most Surprising of All Locations Is High in Colorado Clouds.

HAMILTON, COLO.—Look where you will—in the Pacific ocean, off the coast of California, in the jungles of South America, in the dust bowl of Oklahoma—you can always find an oil field.

Travel the world over and you will never see one in a more surprising location than the Wilson Creek field of Colorado. Anyone but an oil man, who takes his oil wherever he can find it, would wonder how the field ever was discovered in the first place.

For Wilson Creek sits precariously in the clouds on the continental divide, 8,378 feet above sea level. It's the highest field in the United States and you take your life in your hands to get there.

You start from Craig, Colo., over the "Little Burma Road," which is called that because it looks like the famous and equally hazardous wartime route over the Himalayas.

Giant Pin Cushions.

For 40 breath-taking miles, you wind around towering mountain peaks, looking dizzily off into space, while your ears pop as you gain altitude. You don't see a man-made structure the entire trip until suddenly you reach the roof of the continent and there you are at Wilson Creek where oil derricks stick crazily out from the mountainside like pins in giant pin cushions.

These wells are on shelves carved out of the sides of the peaks. A false move at any of these sites would send a careless man spinning a thousand feet down to a rocky canyon floor.

Amazingly there have been no such false moves to this day at Wilson Creek.

The nation's highest oil field was discovered in 1938 and until the mammoth development began two years ago at nearby Rangely field it was the biggest producing area in Colorado.

No Pumping Problem.

Gaining access to Wilson Creek involved a major feat in road engineering. Even after the road was finished, there remained the gargantuan task of keeping it clear of snowdrifts. Up here at the top of the continent a 14-inch snow in mid-May isn't unusual. There's an airfield for emergency use.

The Texas Co. and the California Co., a subsidiary of Standard Oil of California, developed Wilson Creek. There's no pumping problem. The oil just flows downhill to the nearest refineries.

Wilson Creek's 29 wells produce about 7,000 barrels of oil a day in the summertime from the Morrison and Sundance sands at depths of 6,000 to 7,000 feet. In winter, the paraffin in the crude gets stiff from the cold and hampers the flow of the oil.

This oil flows by gravity from the wells to the gathering tanks and from there the Texas Co. sends its share rocketing on downhill to a refinery at Craig. From Wilson Creek to Craig is a drop of 2,000 feet.

Woman Kills Her Baby Boy, Feared Father Would Take Him

WEBB CITY, MO.—A 36-year-old mother tearfully related that she had shot and killed her baby son, police said, because she thought her husband was going to take the child away from her.

Prosecuting Attorney Ralph Baird said Mrs. Ruth Gilbert Hampton signed a statement in which she said that she first sent three bullets into the six-week-old infant's body and then turned the revolver on herself. She suffered powder burns.

A quarrel with her husband, Tom Hampton, a truck driver, preceded the shooting, Baird said Mrs. Hampton told him. The prosecuting attorney said he would file murder charges against the mother.

Did junior ever ask you whether you ever hit a home run? This is the time of the year when questions like that one will come poppin' at pop. Well, daddy, you can look junior right in the eye and say truthfully: "Yes, son, I did many times," (that is if you are investing in Savings Bonds every payday.) Figure it out yourself. Every Savings Bond represents a four-base hit for junior's future. Even Babe Ruth couldn't hit one over the fence every time he came to bat. Step to the plate, dad, and clout one more Savings Bond into your strong box. Some day junior will stand up and cheer a real home run hitter.

INSURANCE is different from most of the things you b cause you must buy insurance BEFORE - not WHEN NEED IT. When the need comes you will know exactly you should HAVE HAD. However, it's TOO LATE then anything about it. Whether what you should have had is you have when the loss occurs, depends largely on the ledge and experience of the agency that plans your insu program. If that is the best available, you can DEPEND o insurance to do what YOU WANT and expect it to do.
